Quote

Trump has not protected Americans from the coronavirus, which has killed more than 210,000 of our neighbors. Adjusted for population, that's four times as many as Russia, five times as many as Germany and 50 times as many as Japan. The virus is not Trump's fault. But his failure to take the crisis seriously and rally the country to a common cause contributed to American casualties. At the outset, Trump publicly pooh-poohed the virus, even as he was privately telling journalist Bob Woodward it was a grave danger. There is no better example of Trump's central character flaw: He will always put self-interest above national interest.
