How Not to Deal with North Korea

The printable version is no longer supported and may have rendering errors. Please update your browser bookmarks and please use the default browser print function instead.

This is an opinion item.

Author(s) Richard J. Bernstein

Source New York Review of Books

Date February 1, 2007

URL http://www.nybooks.com/articles/19923

Quote

"Officially, the Bush administration rejects the one approach that has proven useful in the past: formal, high-level, one-on-one negotiations with Pyongyang of the sort that Clinton pursued ... The situation can only be seen as a major failure of the Bush administration, which, despite all its bluster about the axis of evil and the use of preemptive military force to combat it, has yet to find a way either to punish North Korea for pursuing nuclear weapons or to offer rewards for it to stop its program."

"

Add or change this opinion item's references

This item argues for the position United States should negotiate with North Korea on the topic North Korean nuclear crisis.

Retrieved from "https://discoursedb.org/w/index.php?title=How Not to Deal with North Korea&oldid=5135"

This page was last edited on March 26, 2007, at 19:03.

All text is available under the terms of the GNU Free Documentation License.