ObamaCare Is All About Rationing

The printable version is no longer supported and may have rendering errors. Please update your browser bookmarks and please use the default browser print function instead.

This is an opinion item.

Author(s) Martin Feldstein

Source The Wall Street Journal

Date August 18, 2009

URL http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424052970204683204574358233780260914.html

Quote

"In the British national health service, a government agency approves only those expensive treatments that add at least one Quality Adjusted Life Year (QALY) per £30,000 (about $49,685) of additional health-care spending. If a treatment costs more per QALY, the health service will not pay for it. The existence of such a program in the United States would not only deny lifesaving care but would also cast a pall over medical researchers who would fear that government experts might reject their discoveries as "too expensive."

"

Add or change this opinion item's references

This item argues against the position Act should be passed on the topic Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act.

Retrieved from "https://discoursedb.org/w/index.php?title=ObamaCare Is All About Rationing&oldid=11351"

This page was last edited on March 11, 2010, at 14:37.

All text is available under the terms of the GNU Free Documentation License.