

Why talks with N. Korea eventually must resume

The printable version is no longer supported and may have rendering errors. Please update your browser bookmarks and please use the default browser print function instead.

This is an opinion item.

Author(s) Trudy Rubin

Source The Philadelphia Inquirer

Date October 15, 2006

URL http://www.philly.com/mld/philly/news/columnists/trudy_rubin/15760094.htm

Quote

“ There is strong Bush resistance to talks - especially direct talks - or sending a U.S. emissary along the lines of a Carter. And the chances of success are much slimmer now than under Clinton. But at some point, the White House will have to decide whether it wants to pursue the small chance of freezing Pyongyang's program, or at least limiting the number of weapons.”

Add or change this opinion item's references

This item argues for the position United States should negotiate with North Korea on the topic North Korean nuclear crisis.

Retrieved from

"https://discoursedb.org/w/index.php?title=Why_talks_with_N._Korea_eventually_must_resume&oldid=4358"

This page was last edited on January 3, 2007, at 00:07.

All text is available under the terms of the GNU Free Documentation License.